Pa ented Dec. 26th, 1871, by J. S. PROCTER, Of Franklin, Kentucky. To Bee-keepers everywhere:

The following points of excellence comprise a few of the many, that may be truthfully latined for my hive:

1. It is simple in construction, next in ap-searance and is the most easily understood and managed movable comb frame Hive ever in-vented.

vented.

2. The only material required in its construction is 26 feet of iumber, the nails necessity to fasten it logether and a few small scraps of wire cloth to cover ventilators. Not a screw serve eye, hook and eye, hinge, pivot, piece of tin, tin tube, glass, or other expensive material is used in its construction.

3. When properly used, it is the collect hive for summer and as warm as the warmest for sinter use, affording ample protection for the successful wintering of colonies on the summer stanci.

mer stand.

4. By its use the necessity for "honey beards" or "honey beards" is entirely dispensed with, while the chambers may be contracted to suit the bundling of any sized colony of from one single frame to ten, enabling the keeper to confine the apimal heat to the space only occupied by the colony.
